Fresh off of his stay of execution from the atrocities he committed at the Siege of Caerleon, Mordred and his malevolent mother Morganna find themselves once again allied with Briton's interminable enemies, the Saecsons. This time, the diabolical duo seek to turn the Church from their support of Arthur by accusing Arthur and Myrddin of trying to bring back the Druid schools, teaching pagan ways to the youth of Briton! Pope Gregory and native Briton Cardinal Dubrieius turn a deaf ear to their accusations when the pair pleads their case directly to the Holy Father in Rome. Mordred and Morganna storm back to their Saecson allies, who have teamed with another antagonist of Briton, the Jutes, and the combined forces square off in a battle for the ages against Arthur's forces in what history has told us was Arthur's final and greatest battle: the Battle of Mount Baedon, from whose field came no victor.
