Vampires can be good too!

Jenny Wakeham had met Cross Lemieux one stormy day, when he shielded her from the rain with his umbrella while he got wet instead. They were inseparable, and no amount of teasing from other kids would ever get between them. Until Jenny's family decides to move somewhere else, and they are pulled apart.

Promising to keep in contact, Jenny and Cross wrote each other for many years until Cross suddenly stopped replying. Still, Jenny hoped that she'd see her childhood friend again, holding on to a declaration she made to him, that she would become his bride, keeping her from forgetting.

Cross's life was turned upside down when he came home and found his family dead by a creature he never thought existed. It bit into his flesh and left him for dead, all while witnessing his sister's death right in front of him. Turned into a vampire himself, he strives to live as best as he can, all the while keeping the picture of the girl who promised to marry him all those years ago.

Years pass and they're paths cross once more, but a lot has changed between them. Can they rekindle their friendship once again? Or will this moment be the love they have both been waiting for?
